Regenerative dentistry is a transformative approach that moves beyond simply restoring or replacing missing teeth, aiming instead to repair or regenerate functional, natural oral tissues using stem cells, scaffolds and growth factors. It offers long term sustainability by preserving natural structures, accelerating healing through autologous platelet concentrates and providing superior aesthetic/functional outcomes compared to synthetic materials. Our endeavour with this programme is to bring the delegates up-to-date with the current status of this promising field, educate them on the technique available to achieve predictable regeneration as well as make them aware of the future prospects.
